Q: Filter lists by columns I have a list of two column data: import numpy as np import pandas as pd df = pd.DataFrame(np.random.randint(100, size=(5, 2)), columns=list('AB')) which looks like: 0 80 1 76 2 65 3 90 4 88 What I would like to do is construct another list that only includes the rows where the first value of the two column is less than or equal to 80. So that I have a second list which looks like: 0 80 1 76 Is there an easier way to do this than the approach that I've done? df.loc[df['A'] >> df A B 0 2 9 1 6 7 2 4 4 3 8 6 4 7 4 >>> df.iloc[:] A B 0 2 9 1 6 7 4 7 4 A: for row in df[df.A body { margin-left: 20px; }

Q: How to freeze a picture and show it on Windows (e.g. windows explorer) I'm looking for a way to freeze a picture. I've looked around and it seems that this is possible with a few tools. However, I don't know how I would go about implementing this, since all the tools I found are separate programs and I would like to do this in windows explorer. A: To the best of my knowledge, there is no way to do this using only software. The Windows PE based boot kernel allows the use of the Win32 APIs to launch apps, but not much more (there's a limit on number of API calls, and the kernel does not provide any). Thumbelina uses a program called iFSF to do the same task, but again, the kernel does not provide support to do this outside of launching apps. Windows itself is supposed to be able to launch arbitrary executables upon system startup, but that's only meant for showing a very basic splashscreen image and playing a system tone. An easy way to do this is to use an image of a text screen and move your cursor across the image, moving individual characters with Alt+A or Alt+B. The following is a quick and dirty algorithm. It's based on the fact that Win32 has a lot of draw-related functions. While in a window explorer, type the following in the console (e.g. by pressing Ctrl+Alt+T): for (int i = 0; i (i - 39) && j
